

Dennis was a special friend and colleague. He was a great cook and gourmet, and wrote about these freelance while a doctoral student. Near graduation, he had a tough choice between an offer to join MIT, or become Chief Dining Editor for Chicago magazine. When a budget cut led MIT to withdraw its offer his career as a renowned restaurant critic took off. Dennis remained in touch with academe. There was a lot of sociology in his restaurant reviews. He taught about writing them at Northwestern, and partnered with Glenn on articles about authenticity. Dennis was kind, generous and always fun to be with. We will all miss him.

Paul Hirsch